Teams of officers from the Yard's Serious Crimes Branch examined CID records and documentation at the stations and in some cases removed accounts of prison interviews. They are investigating claims that Kent detectives have been systematically and fraudulently improving their crime clear-up rates by ascribing unsolved crimes to convicted criminals who make false confessions in return for favours in prison.

The allegations were made early this year by PC Ron Walker, a serving Kent police officer. The Metropolitan Police was asked to investigate by Mr Frank Jordan, Kent's Chief Constable.

Mr Jordan yesterday de-clined to comment on the raids on his stations, as did Scouland Yard. The Kent force was at pains to point out that it had instigated the inquiry and that it was co-operating fully. The raids were suggested by Mr Vernon Clements of the Independent Police Complaints Authority, which is mander Ron Dowling, head of on their release.

destroyed or going missing and we feit that an element of surprise was essential." He added that the inquiry had "considerably broadened" since PC Walker's original allegations and was now concerned with all the Kent police divisions. "Scotland Yard now have to go through such new evidence as they may have with a finetooth comb and it will be some time befare they can evaluate it, but we would hope that the inquiry would finish before the end of the year." Mr Clements said.

Police officers in Kent were laken aback by the scale and nature of the raids, which the force officially preterred to term "visits". One senior officer said : "I have never heard of anything like it in niore than 20 years as a policeman, and I'll bet the old station officer got a hell of a shock when the gentlemen from the Yard walized up to his front counter."

The Scotland Yard officers did not have search warrants, relying merely on their identification.

PC Walker has alleged that the spurious "writing off" of unsolved crimes was in some areas boosting the clear-up ligures by as much as 50 per cent. He also claimed that in return for making the false confessions, criminals were supervising the inquiry, after sometimes being given a li-consultation with Com- cence to commit other crimes

Fight against asthma:2

Progress in understanding the causes of asthma and developing pathways towards a cure has advanced significantly in the past two years. Greater public awareness of the condition has led to a doubling of the number of branches in Britain of the Asthma Society, which offers help and advice to sufferers and their families.

That increased perception has in turn led to twice as much money being raised for research by the Asthma Re-search Council, the society's parent body. Other projects are being funded by the British Lung Foundation.

· Much of the work investigates the reasons why the muscle surrounding the bronchial tubes tighten, constrict-ing the breathing passages.

Contraction of airway muscles is controlled by the amount of calcium ions free inside the muscle cells. During an asthmatic attack, many different chemicals that are usually safely stored in the lung tissues are liberated. causing an increase in the amount of calcium within the muscle cells. This action forces cells to contract, causing bronchospasm. Researchers at Strathchyde University's department of physiology and pharmacology, have discovered that some of the chemicals, including substances known as leukotrienes, can induce the of life is restricted.

The preferred habitat of the little tern is on shingle beaches or sand bars, which make its nests vulnerable to human disturbance associated with the rapidly expanding tourist industry, as well as a more traditional threat from natural predators.

Parts of popular coastal regions, such as near Great Yarmouth, Norfolk, are being roped off during the breeding season from mid-May to early August.

Figures from the society sbow that there were 2,200 little tern pairs in Britain in 1985, compared with 1.427 in 1967.

Political recluse fined in TV case

From Michael Binyon Washington

Mr Lyndon LaRouche, the maverick political extremist, was fined $2,000 (£1,300) by a court in Alexandria, outside Washington, at the weekend, for failing to answer queries about his personal finances from NBC Television. The broadcasting organization is seeking to collect n $202,000 jødgement against him.

A magistrate imposed the fine after NBC described as "inherently unbelievable" assertions by Mr LaRouche that he did not know who has paid for his food, clothing, rent, transport, bodygnards, or law-yers since 1973. This is not the first legal action taken or threatened against the shadowy figure who wants to be President, and whose supporters have tried to wreak havoc on state Democratic Parties around the country. Investigators in the state of Washington and a grand jury in Boston are looking into charges of frand, and that supporters improperly ob-tained money from contributors' credit card accou

Mr LaRouche, aged 63, who has set up his headquarters on a heavily-guarded $1.3 million country estate in Leesburg, Virginia, is an eccentric recluse. He refused to annear in court. In an affidavit, he compared himself to an "impecunious uncle" who travelled from place to place, never asking who pays the hills. He was given 20 days to answer the questions fully.

NBC is trying to collect money won in a counter-claim after Mr LaRouche failed to win n libel suit against the network. A court also found that he had attempted to interfere with other NBC business by sabotaging an inter-view, and awarded the network $3 million in damages.

Mr LaRouche, once a member of the Trotskyite Socialist Workers' Party, is an extreme right-winger, who has several times run for President. His supporters who, like religious cult members, solicit support and funds at airports, have attempted to infiltrate the Democratic Party.

Io Illinois, they succeeded in getting two candidates elected to the party slate, causing the temporary withdrawal of Mr Adlai Stevenson, the candidate for Governor, and throwing the party into disarray.

LaRouche organizations are also active in Europe, es-pecially in Wes1 Germany, where supporters frequently disrupt press conferences.

Angry Gurkhas accuse Army of discrimination

From Michael Hamlyo, Dharan, Nepal

Gurkha troops sent back in disgrace to this British cantonment town after an attack un their officers while on a visit to Hawaii are bitterly angry with the British Army, which they accuse of racial discrimination.

"There were 12 or 13 British soldiers with us the whole time that evening," said a young former rifleman sitting in one of the town's fly-blown bars.

"They were with us at the party, they were with us when we returned to Tent City. which is what the camp was known as. They saw as much us we did. But they have not been discharged." The Gnrkhas have been

are no longer required." Mr Alan Graham, the spokesman, denied the dismissals were in any way racially based, or that the Gurkha troops had been treated nuy differently to British troops in similar incidents.

British ufficers are, however, known to be relieved that the officers injured in the incident, which followed a party at the end of a strennous period of training, included a Gurkha officer, so that it could not be presented as the white establishment reacting to an attack on itself.

The Gurkhas themselves deny that the Gurkhas intenserves deny that the Gurkha officer was as hadly injured as was reported. "He was training and jogging again immediately afterwards," said the young men in Dharan, "and how could be have done that if he had two broken ribs, like they said?" The men are particularly bitter about their treatment since as many as 80 of the approximately 110 men dis-charged fought in the Falk-lands war. Three Falklands veterans who spoke to The Nepalese official reaction has been muted. When pressed. Mr Shailendra Komar Upadhyaya, the For-eign Minister, would say only that it seemed a matter of internal discipline for the British Army. But more vehement views have been published in the left-wing press.

The Chalphal Weekly, for example, said "informed sour-ces" regard the real reason for the discharges as the need to resolve what to do with the eight regiments of the British Gurkha Rifles after the transfer of Hong Kong to the Chinese. "Certain circles in Kathmandu," the paper concludes, "regard this as disgraceful."

There is quite a strong view in Kathmandu that the country has changed since the agreement with Britain to maintain the Gurkha link. "There is a shurtage of labour here now," a Nepalese political observer told me, "and Indians are coming here to fill the gap.

"People make a good deal more money than they can in the British Army, by going to wurk for the Arabs. Nepalese involvement in the Falklands war was a shame for the country, but we expect the arrangement will continue. The King wants to have this link with Britain."

Reaction in Dharan has been mixed. A Gurkha on leave from the 10th Queen Mary's Own Gurkha Rifl said that anyone involved in an attack on his own officers deserved all he got. " When you join the Army you have to accept the discipline." he said. ex-Gurkha from the 10th GR, who had perhaps been longer in the bar, said that any British officer who showed up in the town would be attacked. "I will cut him myself," he said. "I'll go to jail for them. I don't mind. The dismissed Gurkhas say reactions from their families have been mixed, hat insisted they had been wrongly treated. The reason for their discharge was given officially as their refusal to co-operate fully with the inquiry into the attack on their company commander. Major Curin Pearce, seconded Royal Anglian the Regiment. But they insist they told the pecial branch of the Military Police all they knew. "We did not see who attacked Major Pearce," they said.

With 56 million mouths to feed, what's to stop this happening?

That the picture above might become reality doesn't bear thinking about.

But it won't happen, thanks largely to The efficiency of today's farming.

We have around 8 million more people to leed now than in 1945. Yet rather than gobble up more land to feed them, we in fact use thousands of acres less for food production. So thanks to fertilizers, and associated advances, we now not only produce virtually all the load we need, but can also conserve more land for leisure and other uses.

Producing food and enriching the environment.

Concern for our environment is vital: farmers themselves play as important a part as anyone in protecting it.

They live and work on the land: their livelihood depends on it.

The unpublicised majority of them are more and more actively seeking positive ways to enrich it. planting more trees and enlarging existing wildlife habitats. Around 7 million new trees were planted on English and Welsh Tarms last year.

In fact, FWAG (The Farming and Wildlife Advisory Group) was invited by a further 3.000 farmers in 1985 to visit their farms and provide conservation advice.

And while they're caring for the land, they're growing enough food for all the rest of us. and others too. In 1984, our exports of liveslock and other food produce amounted to something like £4 billion, putting farming high in the top league of exporters.

The important role played by fertilizers.

The proper use of lertilizers benefits the soil, returning natural elements vital for healthy crop growth.

As a major supplier to agriculture. ICI Agricultural Division is running this series of advertisements, designed to increase public awareness both of the role of fertilizers in modern farming and of other key issues involved in the production of British food. Many of the facts presented here will be familiar to the jarning community, but we believe we have a responsibility to help keep the general public fully informed on these major and complex issues.

They help maintain an ample food supply to sustain our population, and play their part in allowing the landscape to be conserved.

That's why ICI Agricultural Division takes pride in being Britain's leading manulacturer of fertilizers.

You are invited to write to us for more information on the issues raised in this advertisement.

Baby-boomers: second in a series on the impact of the post-war generation, now reaching middle-age

From protest to participation

John Lennon said the Sixties had changed nothing, but Steve Turner finds that many of the old ideals are being put into practice a hippy, a flower child, a student revolutionary or a swinging Londoner, the optimism and idealism amid which they grew up during the Stytics was contagious. For a few years it seemed as though youth had both the power and the vision to bring about lasting change.

In America, the generation's marching and campaigning helped to introduce racial integration to the South and contributed to the ending of the war in Vietnam. In France, student protest brought Paris to a standstill and the French government almost to its knees in the events of May 1968.

In Britain.baby-boomers saw laws passed between 1965 and (1970) which abolished capital punishment and theatrical censorship, legalized abortion and homosevuality and made divorce more easily obtainable.

Yet even by the early Seventies, the realization was dawning that all This did not automatically constitute a return to the Garden of Eden. In the November 1970 issue of the underground magazine Oz. editor Richard Neville bemoaned the fact that his counter-cultural colleagues had become every bit as violent, intolerant, greedy, devious and manipulative as the "straight" society they sought to change. "We blithely declare World War III on our parents and yet have already lorgotten how to smile at our friends", he concluded.

At the same time John Lennon was saying that the Sixties had altered nothing. The same people were in control and the class system remained intact. "The dream is over." he announced. "It's just the same except I'm 30 and a lot of people have got long hair, that's all

Many baby-boomers here and in America concluded that the failure had come because they had taken on the world before they had dealt with themselves. The former American youth revolutionary leader Jerry Rubin said: "In the 1960s we postponed all questions on personal growth until after the revolution. But revolution is only as high as the people that make it."

Rubin spent his Seventies immersed in "new consciousness" activities, trying out every therapy, health fad, inner-healing course and meditation method on offer. In 1976 he wrote: "We are headed for Perhaps the period.

Ithough by no means 1980s will see the activism of the every baby-boomer was 1960s combined with the awareness of the 1970s. In the next flurry of activity we will come from a deeper psychological and spiritual base." There are some who believe that Rubin's prophecy has come true. Neil Spencer, aged 38. for 10 years the editor of New Musical Express. now a freelance writer and an administrator of the Labour Party's Red Wedge campaign, which aims to use music to attract young people into the party, points to the existence of such movements as Greenpeace. Friends of the Earth and Artists Against Apart-heid as evidence of a resurgence.

There was a fight-back by the Establishment in the Seventies, but that doesn't mean that the Sixties generation lost all its beliefs", he says, "I've lost none of my idealism. I haven't changed at all in that respect." Others point to the amazing success of Live Aid. Two-thirds of the artists were from the babyboom generation. Bob Geldof himself is 33, the steering committee is made up of baby-boomers and the concerts in London and Philadelphia were promoted by people who egan in the Sixties. Those in the business of monitoring attitudes in British society agree that baby-boomers are still producing changes rooted in the thinking of their teenage years. Gerard O'Neill, a senior analyst at the Henley Centre for Forecasting.

'There's been a move towards a more holistic view of life'

says: "An idea which helps us a lot in our analysis is that we're all prisoners of youth', that our experiences as teenagers shape our attitudes through life. Sometimes this is referred to as the 'sociology of nostalgia'. The classic example is the Sixties generation." Sheila Moorcroft, a senior consultant with Taylor Nelson, a research company which analyses changing attitudes among British people for companies planning long-term investments, selects health. organizational structure and the family as three significant arcas where baby-boomers continue to have impact. "It's gone from protest to assimilation", she says, "The people born in the late Forties and early Fillies can now actually implement their ideas in a wider sphere. Generally speaking they're more flexible, more open to change, and they're keen to move away from traditional structures."

The back-to-nature call of the hippics has matured into a range of concerns, from environmentalism to healthy cating. Twenty years ago few people knew the meaning of the word "ecology". Today an organization such as Greenpeace is a force for governments to reckon

Twenty years ago, too, health-food stores were the province of a few suspected cranks, and "You Are What You Eat" was a radical slogan. Today the result of that consciousness can be seen on every British high street as supermarket chains such as Sainsbury's respond by offering a choice of food without colouring and preservatives, fruits tinned in natural juices, wholemeal bread. high-fibre cereals and lowfat goods.

There has also been a mounting interest in alternative health care. an openness to the idea of the body as a finely-tuned instrument. "There's been a move towards a more holistic view of life. a move lowards the idea that if you eat junk food or get uptight, you're Moorcroft says. "Pcople are concorned about preventing illness by finding out what cating does to them and what chemicals do to them. They no longer accept the great god of the doctor."

As baby-boomers move into influential positions in the business world, they are likely to be less fusty than the bowler-hat hrigade they reviled in their youth. En-trepreneurs like Richard Branson (aged 35), head of the Virgin empire, and Tony Ellioti (39), publisher of Time Out, started out in the rock culture of the Sixties. when to be thought a "bread-head" (someone concerned with making money) was the ultimate sin. People like Richard and I become known as hip capitalists, and it was meant in a halfderogatory, half-respectful way". Ellioit says. "At that time anyone who was organized went against the grain, but I believed that if you wanted to defend certain values the rights of women, gays and blacks, casier abortion, less repressive drug laws - you had to have ammunition, and the best way to do that was to have independent mcans.

Branson agrees that Virgin is "run slightly differently from older companies" because of its empha-

Droughts like that the one ouw afflicting Alabama, Georgia, the Carolinas and Virginia are nut unknown on the eastern seaboard, despite its normally plentiful raiofall. But their causes are poorly understood. Great Plains weather records, taken back to 1600 by the examination of tree-riog series, soggest sometbiog like a 20-year cycle in drought iotensity. Similar dust bowl years, for instance, occurred in periods of less extreme desiccation in the 1890s, 1910s, and 1950s. The physical significance of this behaviuur and its explanation are the subject of intense debate. The claimed period has been lioked with hoth the 18.6 year lunar tidal cycle and the 22-year doohleaspot cycle.

The Army and the Royal Family have done much to keep tartan in the public eye. Epanlettes and the elaborate cuff of the kill jacket are survivors of military uniform. Queen Victoria's love of the Highlands made tartan popu-lar in the 1800s. Even today. while the older Royals wear traditionally-styled country tartans, the Princess of Wates and Duchess of York sport them in more youthful, fashionable versions.

And for tourist, countryman and patriot the kilt is alive and well. At John Morrison*, near Edinhurgh Castle, a ladies' pure wool, pleated turtan skirt can be made to order on the premises from a reasonable £29. The Scotch House offers a wide selection from £62.50 to £150. There are traditional Highland outfitters in Aberdeen and Inverness. Tartan shops abound in towns like Oban and Pitlochry.

Of course, the very bright-ness of tartan lends itself to all sorts of abuses. A few years ago an exhibition at the Edinago an exhibition at the Edin-hurgh Festival, "Scotch Myths", highlighted its un-duly romantic, shortbread-tin, cheap and nasty aspect. In The Tarians of the Clans and Families of Scotland, Sir Thornes, Inner of January Thomas Innes of Learney, father of the present Lord Lyon, wrote of tartan: "The whole subject bas beeo re-garded as pertaining rather to the souvcoir shop than to the scientist."

Malcolm Innes of Edingight for an imported kilted skirt is as Lord Lyon King of Arms, is the ultimate authority on tartan. He holds an office which can be traced back to prefeudal Celtic Scotland. The importance of this can be gauged from the assurance of Miss Jean Brodie to her girls that "even if I were to receive a proposal of marriage tomorrow from the Lord Lyon King of Arms I would decline it". heraldry, genealogy and cere-mony. When approached by a clan chief he will investigate and, if appropriate, authenti-cate a tartan. The Lyon Court has hetween 45 and 50 tartans has between 45 and 50 tartans currently registered.

Malcolm Innes regards tartan, like fashion itself, as an evolving, almost a living thing. He sees it as no part of his duty to put people off Scottish dress by being too strict. Rather, he seeks to offer guidance and to encourage the wearing of tartan. His only stipulation is that its use should be dignified.

Tartan is part of Malcolm Innes's wardrobe as well as part of his job. he has three kitts. one of which was inherited. In the photograph he wears the Green Innes. recorded 20 years ago, but taken from a portrait a century old.

Until recently, many American tourists made conspicuous use of tartan about their persons and lug-gage. Fear of terrorism has changed, or at least diluted all that. Most Americans in Britain are keeping a low profile. Two and a half hours tartanspotting at Edinburgh Castle came up with one lumberjack shirt and a dress Stewart scarf. It was therefore gratifying when Mr and Mrs Gussman came into view sporting what was, until recently, the mark of Americans abroad - a mixture of tartans. Jack Gussman wears a cap of McLeod tartan which he bought by mail order from Shannon Airport. His wife's jacket is in Lennox. It is not only as lourisis that the Gussmans wear tartan. Back home, Jack plays the bagpipes in the Shriner Highlanders' Pipe Band, and Ruth is one of "lassies" or helpers. Both are of German descent.

Three judges are better than one

The publicity given over the weekend to the government's next set of proposals for legal reforms in Northern Ireland has obscured a most serious legal issue which is at present being discussed by the Irish and British governments. Dublin has been pressing for some time for terrorist cases now heard by single judges in "Diplock" courts to be tried by three judges. The British side has so far resisted this suggestion and there have been reports of strenuous opposition from the judiciary. The European Convention on Human Rights requires that defendants be tried by an independent and imparial tribunal. but not necessarily by a jury. The practice in all European countries - including those of Eastern Europe - is that serious offences are tried by a tribunal of more than one person, often a "mixed" tribunal consisting of professional and lay judges sitting together. In the common law world the practice has likewise been that serious offences are tried by more than one person, usually a jury. In South Africa, where jury trial has been abolished, judges invariably sit with two legal assessors in capital cases.

The principle of shared responsibility is therefore well

When politicians from both sides deliver their memorial speeches on the 25th anniversary of the Berlin wall, we shall probably hear more complaints than questions. more self-rightcousness than sclfexamination. But are we in the West entirely without guilt for this monstrosity national agreements on torture and brought to world attention child labour and slavery scandals There is only one argument for the wall that can be taken seriously: without it the détente of the 1970s would not have been possible, for it was only then that power relationships were clarified and consolidated.

The date that Germans regard the Soviet Union and other major as the blackest in their postwar UN contributors, whose payment history was, for the outside world, arrears forced the cancellation of a successful exercise in crisis management, In June 1961 Nikita Khruschev was putting tremendous pressure on President Kennedy. He was intent on solving the Berlin problem, and his attitude was that if Kennedy wanted to go to war over it. then so be it.

The president accepted the challenge. He announced military mobilization, but at the same time he gave Khruschev a hint: he made a distinction between Berlin and West Berlin and extended American willingness to defend Berlin to West Berlin alone. Khruschev understood: the eastern sector of the city had been left to the East, and the wall went up. When Kennedy heard the news on August 13 he was relieved. You don't built a wall if you want to possess the area beyond the wall.

Politicians on both sides were disappointed. Walter Ulbricht, the East German head of state, had not only wanted to close the flood cates, he had wanted to gain a Berlin. The Mayor of West Berlin, Willy Brandt, had wanted to tie Berlin to the Federal Republic. With the building of the wall, the German question was effectively settled. The ambitions of both had been frustrated Konrad Adenaucr's Germany policy was in tatters. The elderly chancellor had told West Germans: "The strength of the West will eventually force the East to reunification." But the strength of the West had not even been sufficient to prevent the division being finalized. But the building of the wall also contained the origins of the new Ostpolitik. For the wall proved not only the weakness of the GDR but also its strength, by dcmonstrating the invincibility of any state which had the Soviet nuclear superpower behind it. In Bonn people were able to shout "the wall must come down" for a full 10 years; in Berlin they could barely hold out for a year. Then the city's senate had to start thinking about how to make the walt porous. In December 1963 a pass regulation was introduced allowing West Berliners to visit relatives in the East for Christmas. It was the first success, albeit a modest onc. It was also, though the negotiators were unaware of it at the time, the model for a new policy; what could not be forced out of the GDR had to be bargained for. Thus it was that, with the pass regulation, the GDR obtained its first tragment of recognition, and the first fragment of normality. The wall also taught the West a established. Apart from relieving judges of the onerous burden of presiding alone. it is likely to improve the quality of decisionmaking on questions of fact and guarantee à lairer trial. This is illustrated by the decision by three judges of the Court of Appeal in Belfast, which quashed the convictions of 18 men who had been found guilty by a single judge on the evidence of the IRA informer Christopher Black. The real lesson of the Black case is not that it discredits or vindicates the so-called "supergrass system". It is that the Northern Ireland judiciary acting in the forum of a three-judge appeal court can be relied upon to review thoroughly the evidence against accused persons, and to have no hesitation in reversing the decision of the trial judge. But how much better it would be to provide for a collegiate court in the first instance, so that each of the three judges could hear the prosecution itnesses in person.

In the Black case the Lord Chief Justice. Lord Lowry, is reported to have said that the trial judge had overestimated Black's honesty. "We do not know what conclusion would have been reached by a judge who assessed his evidence less favourably, he said. The merit of a three-judge court is that there are three judges to assess honesty, rather than one. Three kinds of problems attend the introduction of three-judge courts in Northern Ireland; legal. political and practical. So far as legal difficulties are concerned. it may be asked what would happen when the three judges are not unanimous. Provision would, of course, have to be made for this, but there is a strong case for deciding that if any individual judge had a reasonable doubl about the guilt of any accused. there ought to be an acquittal. Another difficulty mentioned in the original Diplock Report was that the oral adversarial system of procedure is ill-adapted to the collegiate conduct of a trial of fact. The report claimed that the flow of oral examination and cross-examination would be gravely impeded if a plurality of judges had to consult before each ruling. This has not been considered a problem in three-judge courts elsewhere. In the Irish Republic a Special Criminal Court consisting of three judges hears cases consid-ered unsuitable for the ordinary courts. In practice the president of the court makes any necessary instant rulings, with the tacit approval of the two "wing" judges. A three-judge court is not. of course, going to please everyone in Northern Ireland. This is not a grave objection as it is difficult to imagine any system of justice that will command the support of the entire population. The proposal may meet some of the criticism of the Diplock courts that has come from the nationalist community. If implemented, there are likely to be allegations that the courts are being packed with particular combinations of judges. The extent to which this criticism can be deflected will depend on the extent to which judges arc seen to share as equal a workload as is possible. on a rotating basis.

Finally, there is the practical problem of finding enough judges to man a three-judge court. The senior Bar in Northern Ireland has been under the pressure of a considerable workload, and it will be difficult to find judges of the calibre to fill any extra posts. Let us hope they can be found.

The author is a lecturer in law at Queen's University, Belfast

In time, the GDR came to be psychologically consolidated as well. Before August 13 almost anyone could escape through Berlin. Because there was a tiny measure of external freedom. inner freedom was easier to pre-serve. After August 13 there was literally no escape. The GDR regime had unlimited power over its people. Everyone suddenly had to reckon on spending his whole life in the GDR. All his hopes could only be realized in the communist-run GDR. People did not become communists, but they adapted. They had not sought out this country, but it was now their country. Their achicvements became its achievements. Today it is little more than a semantic distinction whether you talk of national consciousness or a feeling of solidarity among the 17 million Germans whose history decreed them that particular fate.

But was the wall really necessary to bring about détente, reasonableness and a reconciliation of interests? Unfortunately, yes. Before the wall was built, the two German regimes had been incapable of any of these. Ulbricht had imposed communism on the GDR by force. If he had been more temperate about it, his people might not have fled, and there would not have been the hatred which made it so impossible for West German politicians to come to terms with the GDR.

In Bono, Adenauer bad not been able to summon up the courage to follow his own insights and talk to the GDR. He had long since lost his belief in the feasibility of reunific cepted a plan recommending provisional recognition between the two German states. In fact his position was not so very far from that of Khruschev, who was putting pressure on Berlin in an attempt to make permanent the status quo: two states, from which the superpowers would not have to withdraw their troops unconditionally. leading perhaps to a German confederation. That was the position set out in a draft peace

Paris's most evil fashion

During the late Sixties an intelloctual movement arose in Paris whose main effect was to install anti-authoritarian rhetoric in the place that had been hitherto occupied by academic thought. The figureheads of that movement - Barthes, Althusser, Foucault, Lacan, Derrida and Kristeva were mostly charlatans; nevertheless, in the atmosphere of 1968. this defect was scarcely perceivable, and one by one the univer-sities of the Western world fell under their spell, relinquishing critical judgement for a kind of intellectual alchemy.

As the Seventies wore on. however, the voices of "liberation" fell silent. Barthes, living oul a fantasy of hedonistic detachment, died in a car crash; Althusser, in a fit of Stalinist paranoia, strangled his wife and retired to an asylum; Lacan con-fined his public utterances to opaque and muffled seminars, the texts of which were scarcely readable even to his most fervent disciples; Derrida and Kristeva took off to America, there to enjoy the profitable accolades of the world's most gullible culture, while Foucault devoted his spare time to a defence of the sexual practices which were soon following an injudicious spree in San Francisco - to put an end to his life. Only Derrida persisted in the old ways, each year placing a new set of inverted commas at home dwindled almost to the level which he deserves. The newspapers, anxious to maintain the balance of payments in favour of France, invented a new intellectual fashion with its roots in Paris: la Nouvelle Droite. But the candidate members of this harlequinade were either too crusty or too slight to maintain the necessary impetus, and the fashion immediately died. For the past few years Parisians have enjoyed a period of fashionlessness, in which to look back on the Sixties and take stock of the disaster.

by Grasset which may concentrate their minds. L'Esprin Post-Totalitaire is written by a Czech under the pseudonym of Petr Fidelius, and offers a persuasive analysis of that literary idiom which the French call langue de bois (our nearest equivalent being "newspeak"). The language of totalitarian power is, scientifically speaking, one of the most curious of humao inventions. None of the devices which is employs is entirely new. Nevertheless, the achievement of communist propaganda, as Fidelius analyses it, goes far beyond anything that could be attributed to the stylistic habits of our times. Human beings are for victory, but in which no human being plays a discernible part. Everything in this dreamworld is polarized by Manichaean "struggles" - between progress and reaction, liberation and oppression, proletariat and bourgeois, friend and enemy, us and them. But no words can capture the reality upon which the struggle is focused: wherever a window seems to open on 10 some actual human experience, the language al once closes over, becoming intpregnable to sense. The logic of this discourse is dictated not by reality but by power. Terms shift their meaning as tyranny requires, and truth becomes strictly irrelevant to the correctness of any utterance Fidelius's book was brought from Prague sous le manteau by Andre Glucksman, who provides a forceful introduction. The language of communism, he argues, which can acither be contradicted nor interrupted by those subject to its self-cleansing murmur, has gone one stage further than Orwell predicted. It no longer needs to invent reality, since it has made reality irrelevant to discourse by severing words completely from their referential function.

But is not this the accusation that should be levelled against the "grand theorists" of the Sixties? The suspicion-laden rhetoric of Barthes, Lacan and Althusser, which seldom advances beyond its 👒 own technicalities, and yet whichcontrives to divide the world ioto an us and a them, accomplishes precisely the aims of communist propaganda. Il prizes language free from reality, and makes it into an instrument of power. Foucault insinuated, indeed, that language could have no other function, while Derrida, spiralling into the ether of tautology, mocked the very idea of reference, as an illusion of the unsophisticated. In another recent volume, Guy Hocquenghem delivers an open letter to those who abandoned the spirit of '68 and became, like -Glucksman, cautious disciples of 17 the actual. In his extraordinary polemic (published by Albin Michel) Hocquenghem sets out to create the "unity of evil" which, according to Fidelius, is the necessary preliminary of totalitar-ian discourse. The renegades of '68, gathered into a single fold, are smothered with annihilating labels, some ("reactionary", "warmonger", "neo-liberal", etc) from the Novosti rule-book, others ("scieotistic technocrat", "neoconformist") appearing for the first time. In Hocquenghem's pages we see how the language of the revolutionary - which promises absolute "fiberation" - instantly loses sight of the real humao world, and becomes the vigilant discourse of the paraooiac. ceaselessly working lo "liquidate" an omnipreseot-foe.

lesson in realism. Before August 13 German and Allicd officials alike had given the impression that the guarantee of the Western powers extended over the whole city, and so protected freedom of movement between the Eastern and Western sectors. The Berlin senate also claimed the right to speak for the whole of Berlin, and delegates from East Berlin sat in the Bundestag. The wall dem-onstrated this was a sham.

No German politicians demanded that tanks be used to smash the new wall. But even the gestures Brandt asked for came slowly. It was 20 hours later that the first allied military patrol appeared on the border. The inaction of the Americans, Bruish and French proved to Brandt that the protector powers gave protection, but German interests had to be looked after by Germans themselves. The wall also proved that this power could be used effectively to fortify a state, by contributing to the consolidation of the GDR. How could a factory produce anything when it did not know how many workers were going to be missing the next morning? How could the sick be looked after when doctors were leaving? How could an army reach or maintain its desired strength when there were not enough volunteers? But more important was the struggle for the soul, and here the wall really did act as a protective shield: not against fascism, as the propagandists insisted, but against seduction by the free and rich West. After August 1961 the Germans of both sides could meet only if relatives from West Berlin came to visit: the wall kept West Berliners out, East Germans in.

It was not until three years later that Ulbricht allowed pensioners to travel, and not until 1972 that younger people were also allowed to travel, when family circumstances were regarded as pressing.

treaty in January 1959. The four victorious powers were agreed that everything in Ger-many should remain as it was and 10 years later, that was virtually accepted. But if Bonn had done in 1959 what it had to do in 1969, is it conceivable that the wall would have been built while the superpowers were in agreement about Germany and the German governments were talking about a confederation? No one can give a definite answer. But Adenauer was then reserving his realism for an emergency. In 1959, the situation was not grave enough for him. When, on 13 August 1961, it became grave enough, it was too late.

Hitler can be blamed for the origins of the division of Germany, the superpowers can be blamed for its continuation. But for the wall Germans have only themselves to blame. It resulted from a failure of German policy, on both sides.

Only here will you find the true story of Edwina Pargeter, who in 1911 proposed to her sweetheart after they had scaled Mont Blanc together and was promptly turned down by him oo the grounds that he was already married.

Only here can you discover what really happened to the ill-fated 1973 Natwest expedition to open a Cashpoint on the top of Mont Blanc. And only here will you find out for the first time just why the attempt on Mont Blanc by Lord Lichfield and the Twelve Most Beautiful Girls In The World came to an ill-faled end in a bar in Chamonix.

Now, of course, there is a supermarket, office complex and parking for 400 cars atop this fabled peak, but once upon a time Mont Blanc was a magnet that John Warden drew the daring from all nations and a number of remarkably stupid people from Great Britain. In 1893, the youngest son of the Earl of Truro set out to trace the source of the Blue Nile to the top of Mont Blanc, and until 1950 the remnants of his elephants could still be seen on a very clear day. More recently, the Rag Week Committee of Exeter University set out in 1959 to place a lawnmower on top of Mont Blanc, and as far as we know they are still trying.

And in the Moreover Book of 3 Mont Blanc you will also find a : complete set of all the records achieved on the slopes of this fearsome range, such as: Slovest Ascent Ever: Mr and Mrs Thackeray of Bicester (1886-1888).

First Ascent from the Inside: The Potholing Club of Skipton.

First Ascent Backwards: Mrs-Inge Thuling of Munich, who waltzed to the top with her husband in 1903, accompanied by a violin-playing guide.

Highest Snooker Break Ever on Mont Blanc: Don Blackwell of Leeds, with a final pink to make a total of 76.

Most Unlikely Object Ever Found on Mont Blanc. An unexplained launderette at 15,400 feet (1963), which is still in perfect working order.

Now, of course, there is a fourlane highway to the summit with motorway service areas every 400 yards, but in 1786, when Jean-Pierre Guinness and Maximilian MacWhirter first forced their way to the top, there was little to guide them except Keep Out signs. The thrilling story of the first 200 years of Mont Blanc is bound to turn the Morcover Book of Mont Blanc into a bestseller. So don'l be disappoioted. overall majority of 326 seats, what will Kinnock find when he surveys his troops of the morrow of victory? The marshalled ranks on the government benches will comprise no more than 155 seasoned MPs and 171 new faces. It is from the former that Kinnock will have to fashion a government. He will be looking for up to 120 of them to hold office.

Of that 155 there will be 30 or so who are in some way unsuitable, being too old or too maverick. So from the start Kinnock will be faced with having to choose an administration from only 125 MPs, a limitation encountered by no Labour leader since Attlee in 1945. Wilson, for example, had about 250 experienced MPs to choose from in 1964.

There will be some reserves Kinnock could draw upon, such as extra ministerial peers, And among the large intake of new MPs there will be some re-treads. back from a spell in the wilderof Ioday's Labour MPs who stand for re-election can confidently expect to be in his first government. That may not be an inspiring prospect, even to their leader. Such is the legacy of 1983

The problems posed may be the problems of success, but they will have to be faced. For instance, does he restore Tony Benn to the front bench? This is highly improbable. Benn is once more engaged in mobilizing the hard left against the leadership's swing to the right. Will Kinnock draft top graduates from local govern-ment - such as Ken Livingstone or Sheffield's David Blunkett who are likely to be in the wave of new MPs? It will cause resentment

MEASURES OF REASSURANCE

Over the weekend, the Northern Ireland Office minister Mr Nicholas Scott said that the Government was preparing a package of "substantial measures to reassure nationalist opinion in Northern Ireland." Taken individually they do not quite support this weighty description. Each may have its merits but none of them are likely to have major effect on Nationalist opinion in the north nor make the Dublin Government fall over backwards with gratitude.

at Par But the timing was striking nevertheless. Governments 11-11-11-12 B need something, preferably something positive, to say when the noise of disorder is rising but it has traditionally been placatory words for those who are succeeding in making the loudest noise at any given moment. If nothing else, the Government's announcement at a time of high level "loyalist" irresponsibility was welcome evidence that it is prepared to take risks in pursuit of a consistent policy. Some of the measures are ones which any British government might have found itself taking whether or not it was discussing them with the Republic under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Agreement. S. 1. 1. 1. 2 The repeal of the Flags and Emblems Act is the most purely symbolic, but no less important for that. There has been no prosecution for a long time: there is a strong and clear case for its repeal, not so much on the grounds of irrelevance or antiquity, but on the more basic level of citizenship rights. We should not outlaw political beliefs (whatever their chosen non-violent form of expression) even if they are in dissent about the constitutional position of a part of the

These measures will all cause offence in the Unionist community. It is, and has been for some time, impossible for the Government to make many moves which to do not offend one community or the other in Northern Ireland. To do something as fundamental as attempting to restore imbalances (real and perceived) between the communities is to trespass on sensitive areas. The signing of the Hillsborough Agreement has not made it any less so.

Unionists will reply that these are concessions nut to political persuasion but to republican violence and that legal reforms are stalking horses for the removal of UK sovereignty. Real concessions to republican killing would be very different to tinkering with anti-discrimination legislation

Sovereignty remains where always has been. And Unionists should ponder the implications of the moves Mr ist offences. Scott was describing. The that philosophical enquiry is a mere luxury of abstract thought scanty evidence available is that both police forces are which cannol be put to any practical use. In an era of comput-ers this belief is grotesque. The programming of computers is dependent on formal logic. But let that pass. The belief that professional philosophers have been rendered incompetent to deal with practical affairs is contradicted by the empirical evidence.

More vice-chancellors and heads of colleges have been trained in philosophy than in any other branch of the humanities. Philosophers, of whom Bernard Williams and Mary Warnock are just two recent examples, have shown themselves 10 be well suited to preside over royal commissions. I myself have recently presided over the creation of a society and Journal of Applied Philosophy, which has already fostered valuable work on the question of medical ethics and other problems of urgent social interest.

It should be borne in mind that there are few universities where undergraduates read philosophy and nothing else. Almost everywhere the pursuit of it is combined with that of one or more subjects, drawn from the whole range of the humanities, and in some cases extending to mathematics, physics, psychology or physiology. There is no doubt that the logical sports governing bodies. The Central Council of Physical Recreation does not believe that the Fair Trading Act 1973 (under which the greyhound monopoly reference was made) or the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976 were intended to apply to governing bodies of sport. In this country we have a tradition second to none of independent and responsible governing bodies of sport whose officers give self-lessly and accountably long hours of service and expertise to their sports for the benefit of participants, spectators and the public.

The extra and, in our view, unnecessary burden placed on sports administrators by the tech-nical application to them of the restrictive trade practices and roonopolies legislation brings no real benefit to the public. We trust the day will never come when a governing body is forced to divert Ume and costs on having to justify its arrangements before the Restrictive Trade Practices Court.

We also trust the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on greybound racing will be the last time a sports governing body is subjected to a monopoly reference. We think that report bears out the CCPR's evidence given 10 the Monopolies and Mergers Commission that the best way of controlling a sport is through a voluntary body run by eminent

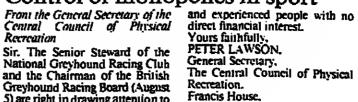

Minority status

From Dr R. K. Kindersley Sir, When Yugoslav friends ask me what on earth is going on in Northern Ireland, I try to explain by pointing to an analogy with the province of Kosovo to which Dr Mark Wheeler refers today (August 4). Perhaps the same analogy may help British readers to under-stand the position in Kosovo.

In each case there are two communities, each with an alternative metropolis outside the area. Between these communities there are differences in religion (Protestant/Catholic; Orthodox/Muslim): in economic level (Protestant/Catholic; Serb/Albanian); until recently at least, in political status (the same pairs).

Most important, perhaps, is the difference in birth-rate, for the Albanians outbreed the Serbs at least as fast as the Catholics overtake the Protestants in Northern Ireland. One could add a racial difference if the Northern Irish

August 8. From the Secretary of the Independent Track Promoters Association Sir. We are astonished by the claim by your correspondents, Lord Newall and J. H. S. Majury (August 5), that the Fair Trading Act 1973 was not intended to apply to the governing bodies of sporting activities. The National Greyhound Club Limited has enforced rules which have favoured the commercial interests of the management of the 44 greyhound tracks which apply its rules at the expense of the 56 tracks which are independent of them by exploiting its position to deprive owners and trainers of basic liberties.

The Monopolies Commission accepted evidence jointly from the NGRC Lid and the Racecourse Promoters Association (a trade organisation) because they were so closely connected it was not possible to distinguish between

Fatherless families From the Director of the National Council for One Parent Families Sir, Your article (August 4) headed "Fatherless families foster crime and violence, study finds", misleadingly gives the impression that it is reporting new research, rather than, as is in fact the case, a collection of opinions from an organisation widely known for its right-wing views.

There is, in fact, very little research done on the effects of fatherlessness on children, and there are no studies which prove that the absence of the father is a cause of delinquency. A Home Office study published in 1985 says "there is no evidence that children from one-parent families grow up any more deprived, disturbed or delinquent than those from two-parent families." There are nearly one million single-parent families in this country and, as Penny Perrick argues in the same issue of The Times, steps need to be taken to ensure that hey and their children do not

POHANG IN HANDS OF NORTH KOREANS

From Our Special Correspondent

8th Army Headquarters, Aug 11 A serious situation has develed at Pohang on the east coast North Korean forces who fo several days past were known to be working their way south through mountainous country inland from he coast, and who yesterday were reported at a point seven mile-north-west of Pohang, attacked the own early this morning and are threatening the airfield five miles to the south east. Fires are burning in the town and it may become necessary to evacuate the airfield. For several weeks past the South Korean forces based on Pohang have been lighting in and around Yongdok, a small town 25 miles north of Pohang. Their supply line has been the road which runs along the coast. The mountains to the west are some of the steepest in Korea, but they have not deterred he North Koreans from making the obvious outflanking move-ment. The exact strength of the North Korean force is not known Three days ago it was reported as two regiments. Probably it consists of a nucleus of regular troops and everal hundred guerrilla truop who have long been established in these mountains.

The allied command apparently ninimized their threat, because i was only yesterday that reinforce-ments were hurriedly rushed to this coastal sector. These consisted of South Kurean infantry and a small American task force equipped with light tanks. Exactly what happened is still obscure, but the American convoy was nm-bushed soon after midnight on the main road 15 miles south of Pohang and pinned down until dawn. Air support was called for. which eventually drove off the North Koreans, believed to have been a small number of guerrilla troops, and permitted the convoy to continue after considerable Mustangs were still using the airfield up to 5 o'clock this afternoon, and in some cases pilots were firing their guns only two or hree minutes after taking off. The North Koreans had moved south of rongdok, and pilots claimed to have destroyed two tanks, 10.

minder of public worries which the Government will ignore at its peril. The privatization programme continues but a large gap has so far been left in both the rhetoric and the legislation. The gap concerns the power of customers against monopoly supplier. The gap was noticed in the sale of British Telecom: it was glaring in the abortive discussion of water privatization. In preparing for the sale of British Gas, the organizations. Government actively quashed proposals for filling it.

Privatization has been an acknowledged political success. But the momentum has to be kept up. That means that it must be palpably more than a mechanism for reducing the role of the state, for increasing efficiency and for solving the Government's fiscal problems.

From the point of view of householders, it is not just a matter of the effectiveness of price control regimes in Oftel or Ofgas. As well as the size of the bills, there are questions about quality of service, how product preferences can be

Mass was said at the graveside in Birmingham yesterday of John Henry Newman on the anniversary of his death in 1890. An annual remembrance, this was the first since it was announced that the case for his canonisation has now been formally referred to the Vatican and accepted for investigation by the Congregation for the Causes of Saints. It may yet take some time, but that hardly matters: Newman is one of the main formative influences, and some would claim the very chief formative influence, on contemporary Christianity already - not excluding a few of its current vices.

He has been hailed as the "invisible father" of the Second Vatican Council. Thus his patrimony extends to the whole corpus of modern and renewed Catholicism. Few men had more effect on the Church of England. He was one of the rare writers of theology in the nineteenth century whose works are still widely analysed for their

There are mistakes in Labour's present approach too. Its published plans for the formerly nationalized industries rely on an over-identification between the customer, a real-life figure with real personal interests and the consumer, a more abstract creature who is a tireless attender at committees. Thus Labour proposes a proliferation of consumer bodies which could rapidly be taken over by professional activists and their purposes corrupted. The organized "consumer movement" makes the same mistake, assuming that the interests of the consumer can

Yet, fresh thought is urgently needed. The customer of a monopoly may sometimes be a plaintiff with a right to have his case investigated. He may be a regular buyer who considers himself to have been defrauded. The TUC document contains the intriguing suggestion of high street shops into which distressed or dissatisfied customers of the big utilities might walk and seek redress.

The staff of such shops would have to be empowered to investigate – like an Ombudsman - and make public recommendations for action. This would rest on a legal obligation on the utilities to open their doors on a caseby-case basis. Where the activities of trade unions were found responsible for a customer's plight, the TUC would, of course, have to be ready and willing to take action against the producer interest.

The housing jungle

From Mrs David Bonham Sir, I have been involved recently in the sale of a house to people who seemed very keen to buy but would not actually exchange contracts; when pressed to do so they asked for a substantial discount (and when this was refused they withdrew from the transaction is this "de-gazumping"?).

As legal costs were incurred by the vendors should not the Las Commission (report, August 4) address itself to the simplification of the whole procedure of the sale of houses - perhaps on the lines of the Scottish system?

A Rolls-Royce Corniche, for example, which is about the same price as a lot of bouses, is legally sold on the basis of the purchase price as agreed, a valid invoice and receipt and a logbook. Yours faithfully D. J. BONHAM.

Sir, The bewilderment of Mr Pugh (August 8) over the regulations concerning the signing of passport photographs is understandable. When I last renewed my passport at Petty France a few years ago I found that a "publisher" (even the eminent one who had signed for me) was not considered by the passport authorities to be "a person of similar standing" to a bank officer, school teacher or police officer. Fransport aircraft also were still flying into the airfield this evening and bringing out certain unessen tial staff such as ground engineers. According to these arrivals North Korean mortar shells were anding in the geoeral area of theairfield, but it was not under small arms fire. American gunners who have been supporting South Korean infantry in this coastal sector were shelling North Korean positions on the ridge about two miles north of the airfield between the airfield and the port. Large numbers of Korean civilians who had evacuated the town had gathered round the airfield, which is situated close to the shore of the hay, and two ships were standing by off shore in case evacuation should become necessary . . . FAULTY INTELLIGENCE

Pohang is the only port on the east coast of Korea held by the allied forces capable of taking ships of any size. It was here that the 1st Cavalry Division disembarked with all its equipment early last month. More important than the port is the airfield known as K.3. he best natural airfield possessed by the allies in Korea. Mustangs based here have been giving con-stant support to ground troops in this coastal sector. Its loss would mean that aircraft henceforth would have to operate either from Taegu, 45 miles 10 the west, or from Pursan, 60 miles to the south. This Pohang affair, even if the situation is restored once again shows up the whole weakness of the allied position in Korea. Intelligence must have been gravely at fault to permit such a situation to develop. Held on the coastal road between Yongdok and Pohang, the North Koreans simply worked their way round the flanks as they have done on many other occasions in the campaign. Both strategically and tactically. the northern command, exploiting the terrain and their superior man-power, have shown considerable skill in avoiding a full-scale frontal battle where superior American fire-power would tell, and in concentrating on feeling out the weak point in the allies' flank and rear. The Naktong River line, which is being beld only with difficulty guards the western flank of the illied bridgehead in Korea. Across the north there is no such natural barrier, only 50 miles of mountain ridges. Again one is obliged to wonder exactly how large a bridge: head the allies can expect to hold with the forces at their disposal.

Shepherds following in the steps of Stone Age man

British scientists exploring early Stone Age sites in Epirus, studying evidence_suggesting that the local Sarakatsani shepherds today may be treading in the footsteps of palaeolithic hunters as they The engagement is announced between David, son of Sir Thomas and Lady Gore Browne, of 62 Melton Court, London SW7, and Diana, daughter of Mr and Mrs J.N. pursued migrating herds of red deer 100.000 years ago.

Deposits in two palaeolithic ites, at Asprochaliko and astritsa on Jannena Lake, showed that these were seasonal sites used respectively in winter and in summer by the same small community who hunted red deer for subsistence.

The assumption that this transhuman community followed seasonal movements of animals as the Sarakatsani do today, was developed by the late Eric Higgs who excavated these sites in the 1960s.

An opportuoity to test the theory emerged with the discovery further north of a natural rock shelter at Klidi, in the Vikos Gorge near Konitsa. Deposits containing more than 200,000 flint and bone specimens have so far been retrieved, indicating a human occupation between 10.000 and 16.000 or more years ago.

Dr Geoff Bailey, lecturer io the department of archaeology and anthropology at Cambridge University, who directs the excavations at Klidi, found that its seasonal occupants - 15 to 20 people at a time - subsisted less on red deer than on ibex whose seasonal movements, unlike the red deers' long treks, were local, between low and high grazing ground.

Dr Bailey said: "We have come to the tentative conclusion that palaeolithic tribes

EDINBURGH FESTIVAL Galleries: John Russell Taylor Bellany wins a titanic battle

The Edinburgh Festival could be the great international showcase for Scottish art, and it astonishing that it has not been so used in the whole 40 years of its existence. Certainly in previous years the main complaint of visitors to the festival seems to bave been that. splendid as much of it was, they could have got it anywhere. And, at a time when Scottish painting especially is making its biggest mark for decades on the international scene, it has been es-pecially odd not to be shown any noticeable amount of it in Scotland itself. Well, this year it is splendidly inescapable: virtually every major show concerns itself primarily or wholly with the local product. I will come on to the way that this affects our view of Scotland's artistic past next week, but for the moment there is more than enough to occupy us in what is happening right this very minute.

The best place to start is probably with John Bellany. He has been a major figure in Scottish art for some 20 years, and is now 44. It is a good time for a retrospective. and that is just what the Scottish National Gallery of Modern Art has come up with (until September 21). This showing is supplemented by a retrospective of Bellany's prints. 1966-1986, at the Printmakers Workshop until September 6. and a small show under a long title. Celtic Reflections on an Auld Illionce, at the Assembly Rooms until August 30, which concerns itself specifically with the drawings and watercolours he has made in France in the last year or so, The effcct of all this visual information about Bellany and his work is, I find, to increase considerably onc's respect for bim as a consistently, continuously developing individ-ual, and to make one see him as typically Scottish primarily, because be has clearly and no doubt instinctively refused to be typical of anything but himself.

The shows are a thoroughly disturbing experience. Since the very beginning. Bellany has drawn strength and sustenance from the deployment of a very small range of motifs, which may or may not have some overt symbolical intent. They include, as well as recurrent images of himself and his large family, such elements as raw meat. dead fish and (mostly rather menacing) sea-birds, not to mention any of these turning into or changing out of human shape. The meat in particular encourages immediate comparisons with Bacon, and these prove quite revealing.

Why are so many of Bellany's paintings nightmarish in a way that Bacon's are not? The answer seems to be that Bacon is essentially a classical painter, while Bellany is an Expressionist. They both appear to use symbols, but Bacon's paint-ing is less symbolic than Symbolist, crystallizing its emotions into static form: one has to remember that classic Symbolists like Moreau or Khnopil are really rather cold. deliberately holding naked emo-tion at arm's length. Bellany, like all true Expressionists. fights his own interiur battles on canvas for all to see, and the excitements of his work are the rather more unnerving ones of being right in the firing-line.

And there remains very little doubt, going round the main show in chronological order, that Bellany's battles have been titanic,

The last bronze rays of a sun which at midnight is still only pretending to set caught the huge hurnished Horus cmblem of the King of Egypt in the castle of King Olav in Finland. It is the sort of moment which makes visitors relationship. Mara Zampicri, willing to pay more than £100 on the black market for a seat that unmistakable raw, gut the courtyard of the Olavinlinna during Savonlinna's annual opera festival. This time they certainly had their money's worth. Savonlinna has always had a close relationship with Verdi, Since 1968 and the revival of the festival in its present form Tronutore, Ballo, Regulation and Don Carlos have been played out in cpic style against the stony backdrop of the castle's huge inner courtyard. This year's new production. Aida, was an outstanding example of bow to work hard the atmospheric but awkward space, with its enormous width but virtually non-existent depth. With an unerring eye for bold, clean design. Seppo Nurmimaa did very little other thun place the glowing Horus insignia slap in the middle of the massive stone wall and square off the rounded arches of its door-ways right and left. This concentrated the production's citture energy on movement and grouping and, in the hands of Andrais Miko (chief producer at the Hungarian State Opera), this was most powerfully achieved. The long horizontals and Carpenter diagonals of platform and stairways, to say nothing of side and centre aisles, teemed with members of the superbly trained Festival Chorus, and no end of soldier extras, culled from local villages and cos-the three formed a tense horizontal, broken by the eriss-crossing of entries and lances as Radames was taken. Zampieri virtually sang Lindroos and Ulla Sippola (Amneris) off the stage. The chill of Zampieri's "Numi pieta" and her voice's vibrant hugging of the line in "O patria mia" were unforgettable. Marko Puthonen (King) and Bengt Rundgren (Ramfis) were both basses to be reckoned with, encouraged by the briskly-paced conducting of Martin Turnovsky to exploit every shifting lintu and inflex-ion of Verdi's line. Savonlinna's second and most enterprising new production was The Tempest, metamorphosed into something not a little rich and strange by the use of Sibelius's complete incidental music, played en-thusiastically by the Festival Orehestra under Ulf Söderblom. Lisbeth Landcfort, in a production more dramatically spectacular than textually scarching, took her cues entirely from the score, and provided a strong, unified piece of music-drama, delightfully reinvigorated by the

Takacs Ouartet Elizabeth Hall

If ever there was a chasm between the letter of the programme-note and the spirit of the work it described then Zsoli Durko provided it for Sunday's performance of his Second String Quarter I hope not too many members of the audience fell in; for the discipline. unnecessarily obfuscatory verbal analysis bore little relation to the lucid and refined artistry of one of his most important works. Written in 1970, it does for

His word for those patterns which move in a determined order is "organismo"; those which are free, functioning, he says, like a musical snapshot, he calls "psicogramma", which probably helps him rather more than it helps us.

What the Takacs Quartet brought out, in a tinglingly alert performance, was the sheer excitement of the work's microscope vision: relics of lyrical mclody showered by pizzicato, a tense fencing of bow against bow as argument is lengthened and phrases broaden into what becomes, at the work's centre, an elegy for melody itself. The opportunity to hear this work, and the quality of the performance of Webern's Six Bagatelles, cpitomized Summerscope's robust sense of exploration, particularly in this little series of 20th-century quartets. The Takaes revealed, as any performance must, and so few really do. Webern's entire world in a grain of sand. Each tiny crystal

Football hooligans leave trail of destruction in their wake

From Robert Schuil Amsterdam

Manchester United supporters returned to Britain yesterday from Amsterdam, leaving behind a trail of hooliganism which started last Thursday night on the ferry taking them from Harwich to the Hook of Holland.

Throughout the weekend the soccer fans, in Amsterdam to attend a friendly match between Manchester United and the Dutch club, Ajax, broke windows, brawled in bars, altacked cars and passers-by and clashed with police who used batons and dogs to disperse the troublemakers.

A 19-year-old man was still under arrest yesterday for having allegedly broken the window of a Chinese restaurant. A police spokesman said it was unclear whether he would be charged or expelled from the country as an undesirable alien.

Another man arrested on Sunday night was released, as were two men arrested on Saturday after no one came forward to press charges.

When the football ended on Sunday police had arranged for a rapid transfer of the British supporters to the Hook of Holland, but a group of about 60 supporters missed their bus and went on the rampage in the centre of Amsterdam.

Trouble spots included Amsterdam's red-light district. Anticipating trouble, police had kept enough cells free to accommodate 50 troublemakers.

· Police guard: The British fans were escorted by 10 Dutch military policemen on their way home and had their passports taken from them as they boarded the Dutch ferry, Koningin Beatrix, at the Hook of Holland (Our Foreign Staff writes).

It was the same ship on which English fans fought a pitched battle last week on their way to The Netherlands. A Sealink spokesman said the crew had agreed "reluctantly" to let the supporters back on

The Angolan statement quoted in the news agency report, which was monitored in Lisbon, said South African air and land reconnaissance pa-trois had also been detected in southern Canene province over the last five days moving towards the towns of Cahama, Mupa and Malondo.

It added that South African planes and helicopters had also moved troops and equip-ment to north of Chiede in Canene province and motorized units were concentrated along the border of neigh-bouring Namibia.

• JOHANNESBURG: A spokesman for the South Af-rican Defence Force (SADF) said in Pretoria last night that it saw no point in commenting on Angola's claims "bearing in mind that Unita already made a statement claiming an attack on Cuito Cuanavale"(Ray Kennedy writes).

Price of materials plunges by 3.4%

By Richard Thomson

A sharp fall in the cost of essential raw materials used by manufacturing industry helped to limit the rise in the price of finished goods at factory gates last month.

The input cost of raw materials fell by 3.4 per cent during the month, the biggest one-month fall since June, 1963 - but rising unit wage costs are continuing to push up the price of finished goods. The price of manufactured goods over the same period increased by 0.1 per cent. During the past 12 months, however, prices of manufaclured goods increased by 4.4 per cent, but this is still the smallest annualized increase since July 1972, according 10 the Department of Trade and Industry. The sharp drop in raw material prices was mainly because of a fall in petroleum prices and the lower cost of food materials. DTI officials said

July's monthly fall compares with one of 1.3 per cent in Junc. Measured over 12 months, input prices fell by 9.8 per cent compared with 8.6 per cent the previous month. The DTI said that raw material prices represented only about one third of manufacturing costs. Rising wage costs were having a cuntrary effect, resulting in a slight rise in factory gate prices. The seasonally-adjusted monthly fall in input prices was 2.5 per cent compared with 0.9 per cent in June and a rise of 0.2 per cent in May.

Fina) retail sales figures for June, announced yesterday, showed a bigger-than-predicted increase in sales volume. Buoyant conditions on the high street led to a rise to 122,4 in the retail sales index over the three months to June.

It is a record ligure for the index and represents a rise of 2 per cent on the previous three months and of 4.5 per cent on the corresponding period last

DTI officials attributed the increase to better weather and early June sales after a sluggish period for retailers carlier in the year. Household goods sold particularly well, officials said

arge boo

Stories about imported cement coming into the British Isles are nothing new. The first significant one emerged in 1982 A surplus of cement on the world market, caused by Third World countries meeting their own require-ments, made the inter-national cement traders who had previously supplied them look for pastures new.

They reckoned that the United Kingdom looked attractive. Prices were high as the producers there had the protection of a common pricing agreement.

Although volumes of imports are still minimal, the cement majors have been severely hampered in putting up prices. Since the middle of 1982 prices have risen only once, in 1985, by less than 5 per cent, and the latest report coincided with an announcement that a price increase planned for the middle of this year was not now going to take place. The reasons given were lower operational costs and cheaper energy.

Obviously other factors are affecting the share prices of Blue Circle and Rugby Portland, but these cement import reports are still taking their toll.

The longer-term outlook for Rugby Portland looks better as it is building up a complementary timber business, but Blue Circle in particular could do witbout bearish news at the moment. Its interim figures, due on August 27, are unlikely to buoy up the price.

The company will be doing well to beat last year's £45 million and analysts' pretax profits forecasts for the full year are on the way down lowards last year's £116.9 million. They are now hovering around the £120 million mark, having been as high as £135 million

Difficulties in South Africa, currency volatility in Mexico, and signs of harder times in the United States and Australia are no doubt responsible for this, so it looks like another year of marking time on the profits front.

Blue Circle may be the share to trade in the account but its longer-term progress is hard to chart.

COMMENT Kenneth Fleet Japan and Germany rule as UK spends

US Federal Reserve Board, aware none more so - that confidence in the dollar is reflected, inversely, in the price for gold, attended the funeral in West Germany of Otto Emminger, a former president of the Bundesbank and stern apostle of sound money.

At the end of last week, two of the leading New York investment houses. Salamon Brothers and Goldman Sacbs, bowed low to the powerful Japanese sun risen above the American bond market.

The latest cost and output figures demonstrate, yet again, that the potential benefit to British industry of lower input prices is promply taken out in higher earnings, aided and abetted by an easing of monetary policy. Today, should you be in any doubt after last week's bank lending figures, the latest building societies' statistics will prove beyond a peradventure that this country is riding the crest of a frightening credit and housing boom. Barclays. as Sir Tim Bevan confessed last week, believe that "long-term prudence" demands that the growth in lending to UK customers is restrained.

Despite the forebodings of the chairman of Barclays it is manifestly not in the Government's political interest to witness. let alone engineer, a collapse in the boom. The flooding tide of credit has to be financed, with the extra deposits required coming either out of higher earnings or the inflow of capital from abroad. Normally, the banks and buildings societies would also look to higher interest rates to attract more savings; but as interest rates, for the time being at least, seem set on a declining course, higher rates are not an option.

This opinion is supported by the Bank of England's bold move late yesterday afternoon when it lopped 1 1/2 points off the price of the Treasury 81/2 per cent 2007 "tap" stock: a sharply better. If the johbers, armed drive the gilt-edged market higher. in the equity market.

TSB unexplained

The Government owed the nation an explanation, and yesterday Ian Stewart, the Economic Secretary to the Treasury tried to give one. He did not do it well.

When Lord Templeman said recently that the Trustee Savings Bank in effect belonged to the crown, the Government was obliged to explain why it was going ahead with the TSB flotation as if the bank belonged to no one. In his letter to James Ross, the recalcitrant Scottish depositor who has already been such a thorn in the Government's side, Mr Stewart explained.

No doubt it is a complex legal matter, but surely the country is cntitled to know in dctail - rather than in a few meagre and badly drafted paragraphs - what the Government's position is following the Templeman speech. The crucial distinction Mr Stewart makes is between Government and State, Lord Templeman said the TSB belonged to the State but, says Mr Stewart, that does not mean it belongs to the Government.

To a layman, the Treasury's position would seem to be that the Government did not own the TSB but that parliament had the power 10 assign ownership to the Government if it chose (which, in the event, it did not). This was because of the bank's status as property of the "State", a concept the Treasury has still not defined. The explanation goes no further than the one given a week ago just after Lord Templeman's ruling.

If the State is not the Government, calculated risk, but one that if it comes then what is it? If it is the Government off should make the gilt-edged market after all, then the nation is being deprived of an asset worth considwith cheap Treasury stock proceed to erably more than £1 hillion. AFTER A HARD DAY ON 42ND & 3RD WHAT BETTER WAY TO RELAX THAN WITH A PASTRAMI ON RYE WATCHING YOUR FAVOURITE YORKSHIRE TELEVISION PROGRAMME.

There's nothing our American cousins enjoy more than to sit down with a tasty morsel in the one hand and the remote control in the other, watching a good television programme.

Such as a drama like 'Romance on the Orient Express' or a comedy like 'The Bounder' made by Yorkshire Television.

Our programmes also get a good reception in important markets like Canada and Japan, and the Yorkshire Television symbol is known in fifty seven other countries. For example, the Sugdens from 'Emmerdale Farm' are not unfamiliar to the Svenssons in Sweden.

When the amber nectar fails to refresh the parts in Alice Springs, Keith Barron will always raise a few laughs in the comedy 'Duty Free'.

As well as picking up programme sales around the world, we've also been known to pick up a few awards along the way. Prestigious festivals in Berlin, New York, Monte Carlo and Tokyo have all honoured Yorkshire Television productions.

The presence of YTV is very much in evidence in other foreign fields. Our television film crews have been working in such diverse places like the North Pole and South America.

One film crew has just completed the swashbuckling adventure 'West of Paradise' filmed entirely in the Seychelles.

With such a commitment to more productions both at home and abroad, we aim to build on our success for the future.

And with a little help from the stars like Dirk Bogarde and Sir John Gielgud, the world will hear and see a lot more of Yorkshire Television.

YORKSHIRE TELEVISION

Chips deal shakes Europe

A share of the second

Manufacturers in the computers and electronics sectors in Europe have been trying to assess the impact of the deal just concluded between the Jepanese and the Americans over the price control of microchips.

Last week, in the wake of the agreement concluded between the two countries, officials at the European Commission and European industrialists have been determining whether it could be defined as a cartel and if such a pact breaches the international rules of trade as governed by GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade).

Two elements of the deal are particularly worrying for the Europeans whose computer industry is desperately trying in retain an identity of its own in the shadow of the large US-owned multinationals.

First, the Europeans want the freedom to negotiate with any supplier - including the Japanese - favourable terms for purchase and not to be constrained by Americans.

Second, the Europeans do not wish this agreement to be an extension of the extra-terriforial powers which the US Department of Commerce has been trying to impose on Europe. On these occasions - which have been firmly opposed by most European governments and quite overly by the British - the Americans have considered licences to be necessary when a product, containing US technology, is exported from Europe. The agreement signed between the Jepanese and the Americans will give the US licence to monitor and influence prices and the destination of semi-conductors. The agreement allows the US to monitor the countries which they consider are ideal back doors for the Jepanese to bring their products, in semiconductor or possibly computer torm, into the US.

Technology Correspondent

The agreement is meant to protect the US market from semiconductors being dumped and destroying the basic fabric of one of the country's most important industries. But it has gone far further than that and could easily allow influence on price and design to be dictated to the rest of the world by the partnership it were left unchallenged.

The five-year pact comes into effect this month and will last until July 31, 1991. It means that the Japanese will rease the prices of their products sold in the US – and possibly other principal markets – because of the threat by the US authorities to impose a levy. The agreement is also supposed to allow the Americans easy access to the Japanese semiconductor market which has remained largely closed to them. This particular section of the agreement is also likely to be challenged. Other countries have found it equally difficult to penetrate a market which prefers to buy Japanese.

Under the GATT rules America is not entitled to preferential treatment, so the wording of the agreement is tailored to allay such fears. The US released the text of the agreement. Reading the small print doesn't dissipate those fears.

It says: "The aim of the agreement is to enhance free trade in semiconductors in the Jananese market

The Jepanese government will encourage Jepanese producers and users of semiconductors to take advantage of the increased availability of foreign manufactured products in their market. "The Japanese government will establish an organization to help foreign semiconductor producers increase sales in the Jopanese markets. "The Jopanese and US governments will see to it that there is full and equitable access for foreign companies to patents resulting from government sponsored research and development in this area."

The Europeans wait with interest to see if foreign means American. If that is seen to be the case then the Japanese-US pact will undouhtedly trigger litigation and a European backlash.

Provided the study results. In software, hardware and management proposals which are accepted, the Database Planner would then become Database Systems Manager, with responsibility for Implementing the software recommended. The Database is intended eventually to support all aspects of the administration and management of the College, including finance, student records, buildings and plant, personnel, etc.

The Database Planner will be mainly concerned with the evaluation and benchmarking of commercially available software - relational DBMSs and associated Data Dictionaries, Query Languages, Report Writers. threat to A transfer fee to be paid to companies that have high-technology staff poached is one of the drastic solutions suggested by a study from the National Computing Centre on the shortage of skilled computer staff. More than half of the 342 computer users and suppliers who responded to a survey by the NCC believed that poachers should pay a transfer fee, though it is difficult to see how this could be enforced in practice. defence secrets

Sixty-seven regarded the poaching of ataff to be crippling their operations and growth plans, while 10 companies believe it is ectually threatening their survival. However, while nearly three-quarters of the companies said training was the responsibility of an employer, more than half admitted they had no wish to take on edult trainees, whether part trained or not.

Not such a secret

Amstrad has finally set e date for the launch of its cheap IBM-compatible personal computer - September 2. The amount of information on it that has already been published must qualify it for the "worst kept secret of the year" award, though if it puts customers off buying e competitor's machine, Amstrad can't be too unhappy.

The new computer is axpected to cost £460 for e basic version with one disc drive and black and white monitor, rising to £750 for two disc drives and colour monitor.

As well as being compatible with the IBM PC — a virtual industry standard now — it will include the tashionable picture-based oftware. Unlike Amstrad's carlier PCW computar — sold very successfully as a word processor — the new computer will not include a printer in the price, though Amstrad is expected to announce one as e separate option for £150.

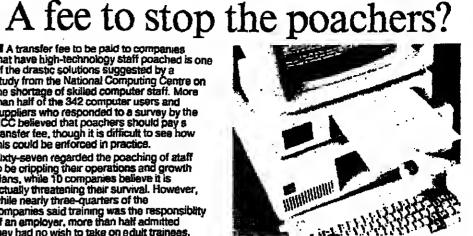

Violence, SAS style The fad for violent computer games shows little sign of lading as fer as some software houses are concerned and it seems the closer they come to a computerized version of real life the better. Berkshire based Mikrogen is busy putting the finishing touches to its latest hopeful moneyspinner, SAS Strike Force, in time for the Personal Computer World Show at the beginning of September.

It is planned to include several different axamples of potential mayhem, with one, for example, set in an embassy taken over by terrorists. The company is claiming the game uses authentic SAS methods and routines through the assistance of e member of the SAS 22nd Hereford Regiment who has been ecting as an adviser. Computer games are largely played by seven to 14 year olds.

The obility to input typewritten documents directly into a personal computer without the need for time-consuming re-typing at a keyboard has been a fraught market despite a clear demand. Frequently the technology available has been for too expensive to be economic for general office use. One novel bnt ill-fated attempt at producing a highly simplified version for £500 foundered and the company went out of business. Now a £3,000 scanner for IBM PCs and compatibles is on the way from American manufacturer Dest, which says the unit can read an A4 page of text into a personal com-puter within 30 seconds, handle all the common typefaces and put the text into the right format for some popular word process-ing programs. tune, installed by British Telecom orgineers as a means of soothing people waiting to speak to oflicials. Now, British Telecom has taken out the microchip which caused the tune to ba played.

The £4,000 phone Those who feel that British Telecom's standard charge for installing e telephone line, around £70, is too high should be thankful they do not live in Brazil, The official price of a phone line ordered from the oppendent phone line ordered from the government phona company is £550, but beceuse of a chronic shortage there is a thriving black market selling existing lines. A common household telephone line has become worth more than £4,000 end until last week there was nothing to prevent subscripters selling there noting to prevent subscribers selling their phona line to somebody else at whatever price they could get - simply registering the transfer with the phone company.

Now the Brazilien government has decided to prohibit such sales end has promised to increase the 11 million telephone lines to more than 15 million by 1989.

Filtering Jaws

The Victor Company of Japan, JVC, has ennounced it will start selling the world's first three-dimensional videodiscs for home use in late September end will then release programmes at monthly intervals. A special adaptor will be needed for videodisc pleyers elong with specially-designed filter glasses which together will cost about 33,000 yen (£140). Two of the first three titles will be Jaws 3 and Friday the 13th, Part 3. The discs ere expected to cost £55.

Taking a cue from Darwin By Chris Naylor

Richard Forsyth has a theory that, just possibly, Charles Darwin might have stumbled on something worthwhile with his theory of evolution.

True, the presence of intelligent man on plant Earth would tend to convince some anyway, but Mr Forsyth is not so much concerned with intelligent man as with intelligent machines. Specifically, he is concerned with that branch of artificial intelligence known as machine learning.

Trying to sail against the to do. common belief that you only get out of a computer what you put in, machine learning aims to present the computer with unassimilated data and get out something new. And that can be new knowledge, new rules, new ways of looking at the raw data we started

But how best to program a computer to do this? That's where Charles Darwin and Mr Forsyth see eye to eye for they both maintain that the natural way to learn is the evolufionary way based on mutation, mating, competition and survival of the fittest. True, the learning takes whole generations to produce results but, in the world of computers, whole generations can pass in minutes. Originally developed by Mr Forsyth while at the North fares. London Polytechnic, and now marketed by his own firm Warm Boot, the machine learning program is called Beagle. A passing tribute to Darwin's ship, Beagle is an acronym for Bionic Evoluuonary Algorithm Generating Logical Expressions which, while lacking snap, is a name that nicely describes what it does once you've worked out what it means. Like many a machine learning program. Beagle is presented with a set of example data and tries to work out the basic rules which underly it. It figures out what rules would characterize this set of data uniquely, identifying this particular set of circumstances from some other.

prime feature is that data are evailable on the subject but mere man has not as yet managed to work out a set of rules which enable the accurate prediction of some unknown item from the data. That is what the program tries

> Beagle, on being presented with data which is associated with some known outcome, kicks off by suggesting e rule which might, just might, produce the required prediction. But, in all probability, this first rule will we but o pale shadow of generations of rules to come.

This is hardly surprising. After all, nature didn't get it right first time so why should a computer? What nature UMIST, Manchester, Septem-ber 26-28 (061-456 8835) needed was a little evolution and that's what Beagle uses Kensington Town Hall, London, So the program may mutate September 30-October 2 (01the first rule to see if e mutated September 30-October 2 (01-727 1929) IBM System User Show, Olym-pie 2, London, October 1-3 (01-608 1161) version gives a better result. Japanese PČs hit Canadian markets

From Geof Wheelwright in Vanconver

The Far East is finally getting foothold in the North American personal computer business. For years, major Japanese firms have largely been shunned by both the home and business markets in Canada and the US. But the recent influx of cheap personal computers and the soft-peddling of Japan's own MSX standard for home computers have combined to make it a healthy imports market. The major beneficiaries of this are not just Japanese companies - Korean, Taiwanese and Hong Kong manufacturers have all seen a huge take-up of their low-cost IBM PC lookalike products in recent months.

Two of the most successful are Epson, the large Japanese concern that originally made a name for itself in the com-puter husiness selling printers and Daewoo Telecom, which makes personal computers for the American Leading Edge computer company. The computers made by these companies both sell in cheapest versions at their about £650. Often such machines also manage to come with certain features that arcn't found on the IBM machine as well as a much cheaper price.

Hundreds of companies now offer machines with similar or superior specifications to IBM though few offer as much "bang for your huck", as the Americans say, than these new Far East personal computers. Despite the low prices, however, not many cheap clones impress corporate America.

Sales hit hard times in the high street

By Martin Banks

The retailing business for personal computers has been going through a hard time with many stores going out of business and some of the big chains suffering embarrassing reversals in husiness.

Even a realization that business computers could not necessarily be sold over the counter like hi-fi, and a subsequent switch by some chains to other methods of selling. has not succeeded.

The First Computer chain supply chain. A large proporadmits that its stores were originally launched "with an expectation that business would be substantially walk-in trade. This expectation was shown to be unfounded." There has now been a management buy-out from Heron which will retain a stake. Nine of the 11 branches will shut leaving a store in London and service facilities in Slough.

The dealer chain, Interface, has recently gone into receivership while franchisers Entre has heavily axed its staff in Britain and the US and recently closed one of its stores in Leeds. Others in the business are struggling. To some extent this is the inevitable result of the marketplace being over-supplied with suppliers. Back in the heady days of personal computing, sales easily dou-bled every year which gave all the retailers a chance to grab some market share. But now with sales still growing by more than 20 per cent this year, healthy by most industries' standards, it is bad the market, pointing to IBM news for many working in the in this context as a company that kept its future plans close tion of personal computer to its chest, even from the retail outlets which have the task of selling the products it produces.

"IBM is not fully reconciled to dealing with independent resellers of its equipment and some of its policies mean that it is not conducive to having a healthy dealer network. It is pushing the dealers towards other suppliers." Some of these may well be the new cheap clones that are appearing from the Far East, many of which, he sugge are excellent machines. Their combination of current technology and low price are what many users actually need.

He agreed that such machines can be susceptible to poor quality control in their manufacture and pointed to a scheme Computerland is now operating in the US. Here it buys in cheap clones and quality tests them itself. The result is then sold as a Computerland branded prod-

in the market."

By Martin Banks

If having just installed a new and inordinately complicated local area network for personal computers, yon find that it breaks down almost immediately, the chances are it is your own fault.

That, at least, is the view of some computer maintenance companies which are finding a growing proportion of its business coming from maintenance and "recovery" work for local

His greatest concern is reserved for the operating system selected, because the subsid-iary capabilities can play an important part in finding a failure and getting the network back up and running again. One problem is the plans, or of the lack of them, that cover the physical installation of the network. It is here, he suggests, that many potential failures are initially induced.

"Personal computer networks are fraught with problems," he said. "We have found network cables wired up to the mains supply before now."

More commonly, the problems come from poorly specified cabling and connectors. High quality co-axial cable is expensive, though often essential if a network is to run at its maximum capacity. Cheaper co-ax and poor quality connectors will often work well enough to commission a new network but will breakdown under heavy working loads.

Two potential sources of salvation suggested are to seek independent advice on the installation at the planning stage, and to ensure that there is one individual within the user company that acts as network controller, and knows what the network is all about said, pointing out that many PC/ATs are being used as simple word processors.

attempts to conceal his assets from the court. The Court of Appeal (Lord Justice May and Lord Justice Lloyd) so held on July 31, allowing an appeal by the hus-band, Mr Joseph Collins, from an order of Judge Callman, who, sitting as a High Court judge on February 2, had ordered him to pay his former wife, Mrs Kath-leen Rose Collins, a lump sum of £10,000.

The Court of Appeal reduced the sum to £7,500, being one half of the assets which the court was entitled to infer the husband had.

THE TIMES TUESDAY AUGUST 12 1986

Britain's world champion 1,500 metres runner voices his criticisms of Coe and Ovett

Cram cuts across the tracks of cynicism

In the first of three articles. Steve Cram explains to Pat Butcher, Athletics Correspondent, why he chose to break the Coe-Ovett syndrome of non-confrontation

The shadows of his unforgotten predecessors still lie ancumloriably across the path of Steve Cram. Sebastian Coe and Sieve Overti were always going to be a hard act to follow. After all, they virtually remoulded world middle dis-tance running and stamped a Union Jack on it in the process. But Cram did not just follow them. He has bettered them. He has won five major titles so far, that is to say as many gold niedals as Coe and Ocett put together. He has beaten them in competition. proken their world records, and largely contributed to Ovett's moving up to 5.001 metres. Yet Cram still sees himself being seconded to their collective myth. No matter how well and how fast I run. if Schwere to sneeze or Steve were to trip up, it would still be higger news." he says. It may show a certain nativity about how some sections of the media view 'news' but, even as he said this. Cram still looked relatively unperturbed, relaxing at the lunch table of the discret hotel near his home outside Newcastle. It is not Cram's style to get het up, When he is not winning gold medals, or collecting gongs at the Palace, Cram is a larry undemonstrative character. He does not collapse in Olympic finals, run into church railings, or refuse to talk to the media for half a dozen years like Oven. Nor does he, like Coe, fall ill on the eve of major championships or pursue posts as athletes' representative to the International Olympic Committee and vice-chairman of the Sports Council.

But Cram should not worry too much. In addition to appreciating the way he won those five gold medals, those who care about athletics will be eternally grateful in Cram for restoring confrontation to competition. After Coc and Ovett had avoided each other for so long that many people must have found middle distance running about as exciting as postal chess. Cram cut across the cynicism, and agreed on a crucial meeting with Overt.

It was the end of the 1983 season. Cram had followed his Commonwealth and European victories the previous year by winning the 1.500 metres title at the inaugural world championships in Hel-sinki. Ovett had finished fourth, but gone on th break his own 1,500 metres world record. He asked to run in Cram's mile at Crystal Palace. Cram, as cham-pion, could have followed the example laid down by Coe and Overt, by refusing to let Overt in. Or Cram could choose not to run at all.

"At first, I wasn't that interested, I throught, well. I've beaten him and don't have anything to prove. But then 1 was five seconds outside Coe's world record. But it was the most exciting competition over seen at Crystal Palace as Cram won by a foot.

Cram was injured in 1984, and almost missed the Olympic Games ("a month before, I didn't think I'd even get through the heats") but be was still good enough to beat everyone except a revitalized Coc. who created history in becoming the only man successfully to defend the Olympic 1,500 metres title. But Cram. aged 25 and five years younger, erased both Coe and Ovett

'Two great athletes with no reason why they shouldn't race each other' from the 1.500 metres and mile world record lists the following year. And again it was the willingness to accept confrontation, first against his contem-porary rival, Said Aouita, the Moroccan Olympic 5,000 metres champion, and secondly against Coe, which inspired Cram to the feat. In a finale even more exciting than the race against Ovett, Cram beal Aouita in Nice. and broke Ovett's 1.500 metres world record. Two weeks later in Oslo, Cram beat both Coe

No one is more aware than Cram that it should have been harder. "If they had raced each other when they were good, things would have been so much different. It looks worse because I've come along, saying I don't care if I race him, or I race him etc. Ultimately all the blame has got to lie with them. No matter how much the system created that situation, there were two great athletes with no reason why they shouldn'l race each other.

"Both tried to maintain the situation: it was better for half of the population to think you were the best than for all the population 10 know you were second-best. Neither of them had the guts, or the confidence, shall we say, to think they were so much better than the other guy that they would say, right, I'll race him next week. They might have brought the mile and 1.500 metres times down to God knows what.

"Il was great drama as il was. But lo get the two of them together, say at Zurich or Oslo, would have been fantastic. I don't think the money was what worried them. Certainly not then, and whoever came out second was still good enough to go out and command big sums in Europe. It's like somebody coming to you and saying: I'll give you a hundred grand to finish second. You'd never do it. You'd rather take ten grand to finish first. Anyone would, well ... most people."

Such strong comments are reminiscent of the equally unusual outburst against Coe and Ovett for missing the Amateur Athletic Association championships and an international match six weeks ago, around selection time, for the Commonwealth Games. "I'd been selected and, to be perfectly honest, I was trying to make things a little more difficult for them, maybe even get them forced into a run-off race, which they wouldn't have planned.

"We sometimes use the Press, and to be perfectly bonest, I was trying to exert some pressure in their direction. I wasn't saying things that I didn't believe, but I could have easily left them unsaid. I was just trying to use the situation to my advantage, which we all do from time to time, well, all the time."

That gamesmanship is a new side to Cram, and shows him verging on a hardness which used 10 be associated with Overt. Admittedly, there had to be another dimension to Cram, which bas helped make him a champion." That side of it is a game, it gives you a couple of points advantage. Races can be won and lost before yon even run them, like Edinburgh, for example. When I tried to race Seb a week before the Commonwealth, it was a wind-up.

Cram on his two great rivals from the world stage, Coe (left) and Ovett (right): "I was always a big Steve Ovett fan and not a fan of Seb Coe's" "I knew I was running well, I knew he was running well, and the odds were I might get beaten. But I thought, if I get beat, so what, it doesn't matter. I'm still getting myself right for the Common-wealth. If I win, great. But if he doesn't compete against me? And I've been the one who's said I want to race Seb, and he doesn't compete, that's another little notch.

> In the eventuality, Coe caught a throat infection and pulled out of the Commonwealth Games on the day of the 800 metres final, the third time be has had to withdraw just before or during a major championsbip. "The pressure of trying to win an 800 metres title is not helping him. Maybe the virus is partly brought on by that pressure. Seb is a little more vulnerable in that sense. He is the best guy in the world when everything is going well for him. But I couldn't believe he didn't run the eight. He's had a couple of days test. It he's fun and got bea everyone would say, fine, be ran and he wasn't fit. If he'd won or run a good race. he'd have been a hero." A bero was what Overt originally was for Cram. seemingly from an attraction of opposites. "It was 1975, the European Cup 810 or something, where he pushed people aside to get through the middle. I liked that at the time because I would nked that at the time because I would never do anything like it. I'd rather step aside and say, you go first. At that stage, for two or three years. Steve was the star and Seb was someone you would occasionally hear about. Then Seb broke through in 1978, but I was always a big. Steve Ovell fan, and not a fan of Seb Coe's.

'I thought I couldn't compete at the same level as those guys'

"When I got selected for the Common-wealth Games in 1978, I felt they were a world apart, because they were going to the Europeans. And even when I went the Europeans. And even when I went with them 10 the Olympics in 1980, I came away thinking I'm never going to win the Olympic 1.500 metres, I'm never going to win anything at 1.500 metres, 5.000 is the event for me. I'll give it another year, and then think about moving up. I just thought I couldn't compete at the same level as those guys."

The transition began in 1981, when Cram finished 0.3sec behind Overt in a 1,500 metres at Crystal Palace. "I actually came on to his shoulder and was scared to go past. I remember thinking at the time: what the hell's this, you can't go past Steve Overt. That was the first time I actually competed with him."

With Coe ill and Ovett injured in 1982. Cram seized bis opportunity, and won the Commonwealth and European 1,500 metres titles. Cram had never known Coe very well, and still does not. But Cram and Overt had been on tour in Australia with their wives. Karen and Rachel, and got on well. But now Cram had become a threat to Ovett, who sought to gain a pschyological advantage by entering one of Cram's races at the last moment in The Netherlands in early 1983. Cram switched races and re-sponded to Overt's gamesmansbip by saying: "OK, I wasn't ready for him here, but wait until three weeks time." which is when Cram won the world title, with Oven fourth.

"The relationship changed. It was never animosity, but I went through this same thing with Jobn Walker (Olympic 1,500 metres champion in 1976). He was first very friendly, then when I started to beat him, he was a bit stand-offish. And now he accepts I'm better than bim, it's all done and dusted, and we're very friendly again. But Ovett's very standoffish. We hardly say hello to each other at the moment.

at the moment." But the revision of the middle distance world records by Cram and Aouita has forced Oveti up to 5,000 metres, where he won the Commonwealth title. Yes-terday, he was selected for the European 5,000 metres in Stuttgart in two weeks time. Cram has a slight injury, which thould clear up hy next week, and Coe should clear up by next week, and Coe has recovered from his infection and races 1.500 metres in Zurich tomorrow night. Both have been selected for 800 and 1,500 metres in Stuttgart. If Cram wins both. Ihal will mean more gold medals than Coc and Ovett put together. and a larger lease on history. And even, perhaps, the occasional headline or two. Copyright Pat Batcher, 1986.

MODERN PENTATHLON Suspicions remain of drug misuse

From Michael Coleman Montecatini Terme, Italy

One of the reasons the UIPMB, the world governing body, gave for rejecting the British offer to test all competitors after the shooting at the world championships was that it would attract bad publicity. "We test more people in our events than other sports, so why give the impression that drug-taking is growing?" was the kernel of the argument.

Only 36 urine samples, and Only so urine samples, and many fewer than the British-were prepared to check in London at their own expense, went instead to Cologne in the care of Dieter Krikow, one of the sport's administrators. The samples will be tested today and Thor Henning, the general sec-retary, will be told the results at the sport's headquarters in the sport's headquarters in Stockholm. A game of pretence.

Yet the suspicions remain: What were these East Europe-ans doing putting up-their noses before the shooting? An inhalant that instantly steadies the beart-beat before taking aim and which does not register in urine complete? Who have? samples? Who knows?

Suspicions apart, it was a brillinnt week for modern pentathalon done in the grand Italian manner, of spectacle, confusion, but great bravura. Grumbles were widespread and also rather nasty asides on the Italian character but, after all, it was their $750,000 and they were doing all the work.

There were a few niggles about the ercuit, on which a couple of the corners were almost certainly likely to be cased before next year's race, and about the slippery track surface, which gave the tyre companies and their teams some anxious times. Bainbridge edged a catch into the slips off Rose just before the end.

After overnight thunder-storms left the field drenched, Middlesex, resuming at 302 for five, let their innings run its course when a start was possible at half past two. They added a further 47 runs in even time before they were all out. Walsh, by Saturday's close, had taken 98 wickets – and reached 100 after dismissing Carr and Rose. The seventh and ninth men out.

Carr hit a high return catch and Rose's off slump was hit as he made room. Walsh finished with 5 for 95, the tenth time this season he has taken 5 or more wickets in an innings. He has had 10 or more in a match on four occasions.

TENNIS Lendl gets his revenge after thrashing at Wimbledon

Stranon Mountain, Vermont (AP) – Ivan Lendl's two-set victory over the Wimbledon champion, Boris Becker, was a classic study in concentration -Lendi's abundance of it and Becker's lack of it. Lendi, aged 26, was smooth and unrelenting on Sunday as he served and volleyed his way to a 6-4. 7-6 victory in the 14th Volvo international tournament. The win avenged his defeat in the Wimbledon finals last month at the hands of the West German, whose game was at its best on Wimbledon's grass courts.

Playing on a hard court on Sunday, the red-haired Becker fought gamely, for example, fought gamely, for example, breaking Lendl's serve on the eighth breakpoint of the 20-minute sixth game of the decid-ing set. But with Lendl on his favorite surface, few doubted that the profession that he ultimately would orevail.

Lendi's comments after the game illustrated the concentration and intensity that has made him - and kept him - the world's No. 1 men's singles player. Up 6-0 - one short of Becker during a court-change for fear of losing his focus. "I was anxious to concentrate very hard and nol to let any-thing happen, like dropping my serve at 6-love," he said. serve at 6-love," he said. A cross-court, backhand by Becker went wide on the next point, giving Lendi game, set, match and a $40,000 (about £27,000) paycheck that made him the first male tennis pro-fessional to top $9 million in career earnings. (Martina Nauratilova, acothec nativa Navratilova, another native Czechoslovakian, was the first player to surpass $9 million.) If Lend's concentration was intense, Becker's was anything but. He attributed his mental but deur to an emperated horse letdown to an emotional hang-over from bis cliff-hanger semi-final victory on Saturday over

John McEnroe. "I really wasn't, with my mind, 100 per cent in the match today," be conceded. "It was very difficult to psych myself up again, which I have to. I have to he psyched up 110 percent to beat Ivan. Yesterday was such victory - in the tiebreaker to decide the final set. Lendl said sol out of bed this morning. I said. 'Oof, I'm still in the said. 'Oof, I'm still in the the final yesterday."

The Stratton courts are Deco-Turf II, the same bard surface players will encounter at the US Open Inter this month in New York, where Lendl will be the defending champion. But Lendl will champion. But Lendl said Sunday's win should not increase the pressure on bim at Flushing Meadow. There is always pressure and basically, there is as much pressure as you let get to you," he said.

McEnroe and Peter Fleming. playing together again for the first time in a year, won the doubles title, by defeating Paul Amacone and Christo Van Rensburg. of South Africa, 6-3. 3-6, 6-3 to complete the rainued tournament.

Because of heavy rain during the week, the schedule of matches was so far behind that McEnroe and Fleming had to play two doubles matches on Sunday. But by the time they Sunday. But by the time they had finished the second, it was too late to play the title match.

IN BRIEF

Chuck McKintey, former Wimbledon lennis Champion, died on Monday al Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas. He was 45. McKinley had been ill for about 15 months and was suffering from a malig-nant brain tumor, a family spokesman. George Ribet, said.

He won the men's single title at Wimbledon in 1963 and was a finalist in 1961. He was US Open doubles champion 1961, 1963 and 1964 with partner Dennis Ralston, Mc-Kinley won the US indoor singles championship in 1962 and 1964 and was doubles champion in 1962 and 1964 with Rod Laver and in 1963 and 1965 with Ralston. He won the US clay championship in 1962 and 1963 and was the doubles champion in 1961 and 1964 with Ralston.

McKinley, who was a mem-ber of the US Davis Cup team from 1960 to 1965, was named in the Tennis Hall of Fame last July. He retired from active rennis in the late 1960s and worked as a broker.

Considering that no more than 75 minutes play was possible yesterday, in the second Test match. sponsored by Cornhill. New Zealand made good progress, in dismissing Moxon and Athey at a cost of only 33 runs. With Gooch having been lost on Saturday. only Gower and Gatting of the specialist batsmen remain. The match ends today, and there is said to be less likelihood of the forecast of fine weather being thrown off course.

The position is not much different from that at Lord's in the first Test a formight ago. There, too, New Zealand were held up by rain on the Monday after gaining a first innings lead. On the Tuesday. England, thanks to Gooch, held on for a draw. Now, as it did then, the pitch may be expected to play as well as at any time in the match.

Heavy overnight storms delayed yesterday's start until 1.10, and an autumnul gloom kept the players off the field from 2.25 onwards. Moxon was out in the eighth of the day's 18 overs and Athey in the 17th. It was the fourth time in two Tests that Moxon fell to Hadlee. It was the outswinger that accounted for him. Already beaten by it twice he was lured again, Smith, the wicketkeeper, taking a thickish edge. to be room for more than one

 Sbirley Strong, a surprise choice for the European cham-pionships, has decided yester-day to withdraw from the meeting (a special correspon-dent writes). The Olympic silver medallist is still devastated at failing to make the Commonwealth Games and missing the opportunity to defend the 100 metres hurdles title. She said: "It killed my it," Graham Walker says. Walker, chairman of BACC, is convinced that a coincidence of favourable factors may. make this the strongest bid by Britain since they lost the first contest in 1851. A financially confident front Walker, who has carefully helped create an organization of design, management, marketing and sailing, "with a structure that doesn't allow me to tinker," likens the administration, as well as the performance, to a World Cup: with an important difference. "When our World Cup team sets off for Mexico, or the British Lions for New Zea-land, nobody doubts whether the FA or the Rugby Union can afford the trip," he says, "yet everybody tends to ques-tion the state of our finances." False rumours about interval payments still to be made to Cougar, builders of Crusade I and II. designed by law Howlett and David Hollom, have fuelled scepticism. A single remaining payment, agreed in contracts as a condition of receiving both orders, is due next month. Walker is anxions to present a financially confident front - "Everything the squad is asking for they're getting, including two new keels this month" - but at the same time not to deter further sponsorship.
